EACH BEAUTY

buff up

For smooth skin, you need a bit of rough. The ultimate skin scrub is the Templetree Bliss body treatment at Hotel St-Barth Isle de France in St Barths (00 59 05 90 27 61 81), which uses sand from the island's Baie des Flamands and is followed by a shiatsu massage with aromatic frangipani oil. For something a little closer home, try Clarins' Fruit Salt Scrubs salt treatment, £35 (0800 036 3558). For at-home exfoliation, use Ren's Guerande Salt Exfoliating Body Balm, £19 (0845 225 5600), or L'Occitane's Lavender Basil Grape Seed Oil Scrub, £32. For the face, try Laboratoire Remède's Sweet Clay Mask, £26, which has a clay-like texture.

These days, trends come and go faster than you can flutter your false eyelashes, but cosmetics that shimmer and glow are here to stay.

Liberty Ross & Amanda Harlech

Two Kindred Spirits

When they first became friends, Liberty Ross and Amanda Harlech both hesitate to specify a date. Their sisterlike synergy is so subtly disingenuous, it's just that for these kindred spirits their affinity feels timeless. They found each other in the high-and-tumble fashion industry, at the altar of its high priest, Monsieur Lagerfeld. (And who wouldn't be drawn together by the soft glow of Chanel?) "I feel as though I have known Amanda forever, but perhaps that is just because I have always felt so at ease around her and oddly connected to her," says Ross. "I suppose I got to really know her when I started working with Karl, when I was 19. I am very lucky to have her as a friend." For her part, Harlech is equally effusive: "Liberty is someone of where I came from as much as where I'm going," she says. "She is subtle, distilled like a perfume, she senses everything a step before I do. I love the wisdom in the reach of her laugh, the insight in her all-seeing eye, her compassion and verve and dance. We do the same things move us—we can share without saying
